Looking at reel success

If a picture says a thousand words then the above figure says more about its subject than a thousand words ever could. "Two Fragments" is a movie directed by Quakers Hill High School student Alex Henry. Henry, who has just been named one of the best student directors in the Department of Education’s annual Connected Learning Awards, is a 16-year-old actor and director. "Two Fragments" is not what you’d expect from a 16-year-old actor, the film is a dark and disturbing look into the life of a teenager who is addicted to drugs. The film, directed by a 16-year-old, explores the inner turmoil of a young addict and the consequences of drug addiction.

Taking his directorial lead from indie Stanley Kubrick and Alfred Hitchcock, Alex says he’s got his finger on the pulse. ""Two Fragments"" is a provocative and thought-provoking film that will make people think and talk. It’s a film that will make people stop and think.”
